

5-21-2015

Adult Learners in the Library—Are they Being Served?

Makiba Foster

Washington University in St Louis, mfoster@wustl.edu

Kristine Helbling

Washington University in St Louis, helbling@wustl.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://openscholarship.wustl.edu/lib_papers

 Part of the Adult and Continuing Education and Teaching Commons, Higher Education Commons, and the Information Literacy Commons

Recommended Citation

Foster, Makiba and Helbling, Kristine, "Adult Learners in the Library—Are they Being Served?" (2015). University Libraries Publications. 5.

https://openscholarship.wustl.edu/lib_papers/5

This Column or Essay is brought to you for free and open access by the University Libraries at Washington University Open Scholarship. It has been accepted for inclusion in University Libraries Publications by an authorized administrator of Washington University Open Scholarship. For more information, please contact digital@wumail.wustl.edu.

You are here: Home / Opinion / Peer to Peer Review / Adult Learners in the Library—Are they Being Served? | Peer to Peer Review

Adult Learners in the Library—Are they Being Served? | Peer to Peer Review

By Makiba Foster and Kris Helbling on May 21, 2015 Leave a Comment

Like many academic librarians, after completing the marathon of the traditional school year, we often use the summer semester to reflect, revise, and plan for the upcoming fall. In the summer of 2012, during a casual conversation in which we shared stories about rewarding reference interactions, we stumbled upon an “a-ha moment,” discovering an opportunity to connect targeted library outreach with an underserved user group. During this exchange, we realized how much we both enjoy working with adult learners and how they always seem genuinely interested in gaining skills to make themselves better library users, and therefore better students. This conversation became the catalyst for an idea of a library course designed specifically for adult learners returning to the classroom.

Makiba Foster, left, and Kris Helbling, right

Teaching was nothing new to us, but creating a semester-long course presented a new set of challenges. First, how could we convince university administrators of the course's value? Second, how would we incorporate the standards of our profession regarding teaching and learning? Third, how would we create a course that values the life experiences and perspectives of adult learners?

GETTING ESTABLISHED

The first step was to conduct a quick environmental scan of the course offerings for our university's evening degree program. We found General Studies one-credit courses targeting areas like career development or writing and study skills. For us, it seemed logical that a course helping students develop high-level information literacy skills could be a part of the evening college's stable of foundational course offerings. We petitioned the evening college administrators and presented our idea of a for-credit General Studies course aimed at improving students' information literacy and research skills. We were surprised at how receptive they were to the idea; however, we still had major hurdles to overcome to get our course on the books. For example, besides creating the syllabus for the course, we had to research “peer” institutions' approaches to information literacy in their evening programs. After rounds of reviews and revisions, by early fall we learned we were successful: Mastering Research in Today's Academic Library, as a one-credit hour pass/fail course, would appear in the Spring 2013 catalog!

COURSE DESIGN

No longer faced with the dilemma of one-shot instruction or the common “if only I had more time” librarian lament, we had a full, luxurious semester, which was simultaneously exciting and daunting. We thought it imperative that our lectures incorporate established information literacy standards and the Association of College and Research Libraries (ACRL)'s threshold concepts. Aligned with the guidelines, the stated mission of our course is to help students “participate in a scholarly community” and to equip them with skills to handle “any information-seeking situation.” We designed our lectures to boost students' practical library skills while also incorporating activities to help them see themselves as a part of a community where research goes beyond mere reporting of information, but is something we collect, create, and even contest.

Are You Engaging Your Local Writing Community?

CONNECT

ACCEPT

SHARE

PROVIDE

CLICK HERE TO LEARN MORE!

RECENT & POPULAR

Recent Posts

Most Commented

Most Viewed

New Orleans Library Foundation Board Members Resign in Funding Scandal

Schools, Libraries Will Receive Full Request of \$3.9B in E-Rate Funding

Meeting Information Challenges | Notable Government Documents 2014

A Strong Foundation: Library Master Planning, from Campus or Community Vision to Broad-Based Support

10 Branches Win NYC Neighborhood Library Awards

OCLC Plans to Lay Off 27 Employees at Dublin, Ohio World Headquarters

hoopla Adds Ebooks and Comics, Develops “Action View” Technology for App

 INFODOCKET BY GARY PRICE

ADVERTISEMENT

Our observations of this specific student population's needs and our training and knowledge provided the framework for our syllabus. Because adult learners' needs and expectations differ from those of the typical undergraduate, we realized that we needed to tailor our approach to course design and teaching. Evening students—generally working adults—know enough to know they don't know enough. They want to know more, but they don't have much time. This confluence creates a motivated learner. In our research into higher-education practices for teaching nontraditional students, we encountered some useful principles of Adult Learning Theory, including that adult learning is filtered through the lens of their established knowledge and life experiences, and that adult learners are highly practical and goal-oriented. Throughout the semester, we tried to be deliberate and intentional in practicing these principles, which guided our course scheduling, lecture style, and assignments. Thus, we emphasized that this course would not only help towards their ultimate goal of a college degree but also help them gain transferable skills useful in the workplace. We offered the course at a time that does not compete with degree-required courses, designed it as a companion to research and writing-intensive courses, and encouraged students to use research and writing assignments from their other courses for in-class exercises.

FEEDBACK AND DISCOVERY

The response to this course has been overwhelmingly positive from students and administration alike. An unanticipated discovery we were able to share with the program administrators was that some students would also benefit from a general computer literacy course. Mastering Research in Today's Academic Library has allowed us to grow in our instruction skills, and more importantly it has opened additional learning opportunities at our university for adult learners who are trying to navigate the new world of college research and the academic library.

REPLICABLE

Like any good experiment, ours can and should be repeatable. Here are some tips for starting a for-credit course at your school:

Know your audience: Who are the adult learners on your campus? How is your library serving them?

Check for competition or repetition: Check the course catalog to make sure your class is a unique offering.

Quicker than an elevator: Be prepared with concise, jargon-free explanations—both written and verbal—about the needs the course meets and its relevance for student success.

Allow lead-time: Course catalogs are in the works long before the semester itself begins. A new course proposal usually needs to pass through several layers of committees before final approval is granted.

Be flexible: Be willing to revise and adjust to accommodate requests as your proposal goes through the approval process.

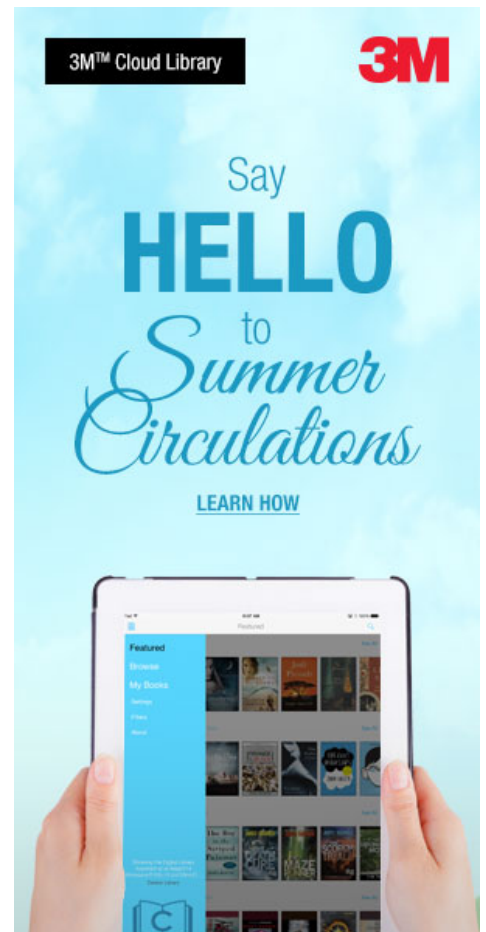

Timing is everything: Our inaugural schedule was one 2½ hour class, once a week, for half of the semester. This time-slot was not conducive to enrolling the typical evening student. Try to schedule your course at a time that does not compete with degree required classes.

Marketing, marketing, marketing: Both new and established courses need publicity—optional, one-credit classes especially. Consider all avenues for advertisement: academic advisors; campus email lists; and well-placed, eye-catching flyers to name a few.

Makiba Foster is the Subject Librarian for American History, American Culture Studies, Sociology, and Women, Gender, and Sexuality Studies at Washington University in St. Louis. Kristine Helbling is the university's Library Instruction Coordinator and Subject Librarian for English and American Literature.

This article was featured in Library Journal's Academic Newswire newsletter. Subscribe today to have more articles like this delivered to your inbox for free.

Filed Under: Academic Libraries, Library Services, Peer to Peer Review Tagged With: adult

JOBzone
School Library Journal® LIBRARYJOURNAL.

FEATURED JOBS

Library Director
Hartzell-Mika Consulting
05.12.15 | Midwest

SLJ - News Editor
Media Source, Inc.
05.06.15 | New York, NY

Library Director
City of Thousand Oaks
05.04.15 | Thousand Oaks, CA

Library Director

June Garcia LLC

04.30.15 | Omaha, NE (68102)

Regional Branch Manager and

CREATE A MAKER CULTURE AT YOUR LIBRARY

Build and field-test an educational maker program for your library with guidance from leaders in the maker movement in our 4-week online course: Maker Workshop: Create a Maker Culture at Your Library. Whether you're just getting started or already have a maker program up and running, you'll gain insights to help push your program to the next level, no matter your budget (from $0 to the sky's the limit).

The 4-week course starts on June 3rd; don't wait, learn more and register today!

CONNECTING INDIE AUTHORS, LIBRARIES AND READERS

SELF-e is an innovative collaboration between Library Journal and BiblioBoard® that enables authors and libraries to work together and expose notable self-published ebooks to voracious readers looking to discover something new. Finally, a simple and effective way to catalog and provide access to ebooks by local authors and build a community around indie writing!

Comment Policy:

1. Be respectful, and do not attack the author or other commenters. Take on the idea, not the messenger.
2. Don't use obscene, profane, or vulgar language.
3. Stay on point. Comments that stray from the topic at hand may be deleted.

We are not able to monitor every comment that comes through (though some comments with links to multiple URLs are held for spam-check moderation by the system). If you see something objectionable, please let us know. Once a comment has been flagged, a staff member will investigate.

We accept clean XHTML in comments, but don't overdo it and please limit the number of links submitted in your comment. For more info, see the full Terms of Use.

Speak Your Mind

Name *

Email *

Website

ABOUT LIBRARY JOURNAL

- Manage Your Account
- Contact Us
- Masthead
- Contact the Reviews Editors
- LJ Social Media
- Advertising
- Awards
- Submissions
- Architectural Questionnaire for Public Libraries
- Architectural Questionnaire for Academic Libraries
- News, Features, Feedback, etc.
- Submitting Titles to the LJ Book Review
- About
- Diversity
- Privacy Policy
- Comment Policy
- Terms of Use

ON TWITTER

Tweets Follow

 Library Journal @LibraryJournal 10m
RT @infodocket: Roundup: 32 Public #Library News Reports From the U.S. and Canada ow.ly/Nut2V #libraries #publiclibraries

 Library Journal @LibraryJournal 1h
RT @infodocket: New Survey Finds Increasing Experimentation by #Publishers and #Libraries With Open Access Books ow.ly/NuE2g #oa Expand

 Library Journal @LibraryJournal 3h

Tweet to @LibraryJournal

ON FACEBOOK

Recent Activity

Log In Log in to Facebook to see what your friends are doing.

 Anatomy of a Rock Star Librarian — Annoyed Librarian
14 people recommend this.

 What's Hot: The Latest in Library Products & Furnishings | Library by Design
4 people recommend this.

 Library Linguistics
157 people recommend this.

 How To Design Library Space with Kids in Mind | Library by Design
62 people recommend this.

Facebook social plugin

LJ RESOURCES

- Awards
- Lead the Change
- Design Institute San Diego
- Webcasts
- Job Zone
- Book Verdict
- Newsletters
- Subscribe