The roots of willow ork trees and bald cypress would go deep into the soil. And they are grown along slopes. The roots absorb water during over/low while the road allows permeation. Overtime, the soil near the roots and road would be hardened, while some clean water would be absorbed and the efficiency of polluted water process would be improved.